PREFACE

Now in its 33rd edition, the Guide to Summer Programs traces its origin to 1915, when Porter Sargent's Handbook of Private Schools included a summer camp section. The popularity of this section led to the first publication of A Handbook of Summer Camps in 1924. The book's name changed to the Guide to Summer Camps and Summer Schools in the 1950s. Effective with this edition, the Guide assumed its current name to reflect the book's ever-increasing roster of academic and special-interest programs. While the breadth of summer options for young people has increased greatly since the publication of the first summer guide, the book's objective remains the same: to assist families, educators and advisors with the summer program selection process.

As is the case with all Porter Sargent Handbooks reference books, the Guide is characterized by its objectivity. Summer programs do not subscribe for space, but instead are listed free of charge as a service to both the programs involved and our readership. Our editors compose the listings based upon data provided by administrators on questionnaires. The resulting resource consists of formatted listings that allow for ready program comparison.

Although it does not purport to include every residential summer program in the US, the Guide is representative of programs throughout the United States and Canada, as well as travel, study and special-interest opportunities in other countries, and reveals a wealth of diverse and challenging options for boys and girls. Programs designed solely for individuals over age 19 do not appear.

Please note that each program listed in the Guide must accept boarders. Many camps and schools also accept day participants, however. In such instances, enrollment information and fees for day clients are detailed.

Please note that programs affiliated with a national organization (such as the Girl Scouts, the Boy Scouts, the YMCA or Camp Fire USA), which were once listed in the Guide, are no longer considered suitable for listing. We made this change for the 32nd edition, effectively reinstituting a policy observed in our book prior to the 28th edition, as we feel that these programs typically appeal strictly to local residents and thus are not of interest to the Guide's national audience. Those seeking information on programs affiliated with the aforementioned organizations can find contact information for these and other groups under "Recreation" in the Associations and Organizations section.

The book's objective is to make available comparative facts on summer programs of varying types. Chapters are organized either alphabetically by state name (then by city and program name within each state) or alphabetically by program name, depending upon chapter focus. Please consult the Table of Contents or the individual chapter introductions for details.

Close editorial attention is paid to chapter placement. Program focus receives priority over program location; for example, a language immersion program conducted overseas would be listed in the Academic Programs—Specialized chapter, not in either Academic Programs Abroad (which describes general academic sessions) or Travel Programs. The goal is to lead readers more readily to suitable programs.

Cross-reference indexes precede certain chapters. These indexes make the book easy to use, thereby enabling families and advisors to match child or adolescent with the most appropriate program.

Over the past four editions, we have altered our method of reporting on camps that run concurrent boys' and girls' programs (as opposed to coeducational programs). These coordinate single-gender programs are now listed as "Coord" in the age range. When the boys' and girls' sections have different names, both names appear at the top of the listing.

Religious recreational camps occupy a distinct chapter, Camps with a Religious Focus.

The 33rd edition continues a trend toward more academic programs. These programs, which are usually quite competitive, serve able, academically motivated high school students. Listed in a distinct chapter, internships provide boys and girls with a unique opportunity to work on a project at an accelerated level, often alongside college students and field scholars. Unlike programs listed in other sections of the Guide, internships need not necessarily offer boarding. While program administrators generally assist interns with lodging, families may be required to arrange the student's accommodations. Most internships pay a salary or a stipend, however, which helps to defray student expense.

Programs that have been accredited by the American Camp Association (formerly known as the American Camping Association) include an accreditation reference in their editorial listings. The ACA is a community of camp professionals that accredits more than 2400 recreational camps that meet approximately 300 standards pertaining to health, safety and program quality.

Some programs with editorial listings also elect to reserve space in the optional Featured Programs section. Through display ads, schools and camps present what they consider to be their most significant features, unique distinctions and facilities.

Even more complete and meaningful representation is achieved through the objective reporting of facts in the editorial listing combined with a program's individual declaration of purpose contained in Featured Programs. These two accounts, both the listing of statistical and summary information and the attractive illustrated pages, prove to be the broadest basis for parent, advisor or camper to gain insight into the breadth and strength of the various programs.

The publisher does not intend for the Guide to be the sole tool of selection for those choosing a summer program; rather, the book should be used as a starting point and a method of narrowing one's search.

In closing, we are pleased to report that the Guide's companion website, www.SummerProgramSearch.com, launched in early 2011. In addition to providing a search tool using the same categories as the Guide, the site also provides informative articles and lists educational consultants.

1. PROGRAM NAME and TYPE. Following the program name is participant gender and age range information. “Coordinate” programs conduct concurrent single-gender boys’ and girls’ sessions.

2. CITY or TOWN, STATE, ZIP CODE, STREET ADDRESS, TELEPHONE, TTY (teletypewriter) and FAX NUMBERS, and WEB SITE and E-MAIL ADDRESSES. Program location and contact information is listed. In many cases, programs have both summer and winter coordinates. If so, summer information appears first, followed by winter data. Whenever possible, the winter address is prefaced parenthetically by the months for which it is in effect; if this information was not furnished by the program, “Winter” appears instead. If only one address, phone or fax number, or E-mail address is present, said contact point is valid year-round. Where available, toll-free phone numbers are listed; they begin with area codes 800, 855, 866, 877 and 888. Be advised that, although toll-free numbers often work throughout the US and Canada, the valid calling area may vary. For this reason, a toll number is listed whenever possible.

3. DIRECTOR. The name of the program head, who often serves as a contact person, is followed by the administrator’s job title. Many programs, particularly family-run camps, will list more than one director. When programs have provided a contact for applicants aside from the director, this person’s name and E-mail address follow.

4. GRADE RANGE, ADMISSIONS and APPLICATIONS. When applicant grade level is considered, this information follows. Note that grade listings refer to the applicant’s grade level in the coming fall. Programs that accept qualified students in lower grades are so indicated. An appraisal of the program’s admissions selectivity follows, with programs categorized as “Very selective,” “Selective,” “Somewhat selective” or “FCFS [first-come, first-served].” The final category is by far the most common, especially among recreational camps. Following are the percentage of applicants admitted, priority admissions policies (with “URM” used to designate enrollment priority for underrepresented minority groups) and prerequisites for admission. Listed next are application particulars: fee, deadline month (or “Rolling” if the application process continues until the session fills) and accompanying materials (e.g., transcript, recommendation).

5. ENROLLMENT, FACULTY and STAFF. The total number of participants enrolled in each session appears here, as does the capacity per session. When available, the percentages of international and non-White participants appear next. Teaching faculty (where appropriate) are listed as a total, then broken down into college professors, college/graduate school students, K-12 teachers and other specialists. Numbers of administrative staff, counselors, residential and special-needs staff follow.

6. TYPE OF INSTRUCTION and COURSES. For academic programs, the focus is indicated and primary courses are listed. If the program offers instruction for students with learning disabilities, either as its main focus or in addition to regular instruction, the services offered are detailed. Average class size and average daily hours devoted to classes, study and recreation may also appear. Programs featuring homework, tests, grades or some combination are so noted. When credit is available, the number of college credits per course and the maximum available credits per session are shown; high school credit availability is also indicated, but the number of transferable credits granted depends upon the policies of the student's home school. Program accreditation by an outside institution is noted next.

7. CONDITIONS ACCEPTED and THERAPY. Listings of programs described in the chapters devoted to children with learning disabilities and other special needs indicate which conditions the program accommodates. (See Key to Conditions Accepted prior to the Special-Needs Programs chapter.) If the school or camp offers therapy, types of therapy are listed.

8. INTERNATIONAL PROGRAM FOCUS and TRAVEL. For programs that offer travel opportunities or study abroad, an emphasis on academics, language instruction or culture is noted, as is the availability of home stays. The program's destinations, both domestic and abroad, are listed next.

9. CENTRAL FOCUS and FEATURES. Specialized academic and special-interest programs have a focus listed. For all programs, offerings are listed alphabetically in the categories of academics, the arts, special-interest pursuits and sports.

10. FEES. Residential and day fees are provided, with grouped fee figures (for example, $1500-5000) generally indicating the fee span from the shortest to the longest session. The program's estimate of extra expenses incurred by the average participant follows in parentheses. Corresponding length of session appears next. Note that a reference year for listed tuition figure(s) precedes this data. Free sessions may be available to all or to state residents only. Programs that furnish data concerning need- or merit-based financial aid will often include a reference to total aid money provided over the course of a summer.

11. HOUSING and AMENITIES. This section provides information on the lodging option(s) that a program provides. Areas for swimming are listed next. School programs that make all of their campus facilities available to enrolled students are so indicated.

12. ESTABLISHMENT and CALENDAR. The establishment date, religious affiliation, sponsor, number of sessions and weeks per session (often expressed as a range) are cited. The program's months of operation follow. Note that a religious affiliation does not necessarily indicate a strong program emphasis on religion. Recreational camps that stress religion appear in the chapter entitled Camps with a Religious Focus. At the end of this section, programs that have been accredited by the American Camp Association include the designation "ACA."

13. PARAGRAPH DESCRIPTION. Significant aspects of the programs are objectively summarized at the end of the listing. Descriptions, which are written by Porter Sargent Handbooks editors, are based upon questionnaires and supplementary literature submitted by program officials.

14. PAGE CROSS-REFERENCE TO FEATURED PROGRAM. Some programs supply their own appraisals of ideals and objectives separately in the elective Featured Programs section. Page cross-references are appended to the paragraph descriptions of participating programs.

The Summer Academic Session is an extension of our regular year academic program. The courses are designed to reinforce skills, preview work, or provide semester half or full credit in certain material. Small classes, traditional grading standards, and individual attention are hallmarks of the academic program. Courses begin for students entering sixth grade. Residents must be age 13.

A variety of credit and enrichment courses are available. Credit courses are for those wishing to accelerate through their curriculum at their own school. Students may also take credit courses to make up a failing grade. Each rigorous course covers a year's worth of work in five weeks.

A separate program, The American Culture and Language Institute (ACLI), is designed specifically for international students who wish to study English at an American school. Balancing academic classroom work with cultural enrichment, the program offers students an ideal environment to improve their English language skills while learning more about American customs and society.

For residential students, The Hun School is more than academic study in the summer. It is also about finding independence and experiencing new things. The summer resident faculty fosters a strong academic environment with a clear structure, while at the same time creating a sense of home. Living and learning with others enhances personal growth and sets a firm foundation for college and beyond.

Each weekday afternoon, resident students have the opportunity to participate in activities, including such off-campus pursuits as swimming, bowling, mini-golf, or "town permission." Our summer game room includes four large screen, flat-panel TVs, and Ping-Pong and foosball tables. Outside games and tournaments are organized based on student interest. Weekends may include trips to amusement parks, the movies, the New Jersey Shore, Hoagie Haven in Princeton, and sightseeing locations.

Residential 2012 tuition is $5275 for the Academic Session and $6800 for ACLI. For more information, contact Donna O'Sullivan, Director of Summer Programs, at donnaolsullivan@hunschool.org.

The Glenholme School

Devereux Connecticut

The Glenholme School is a therapeutic boarding school for young people diagnosed with Asperger's, ADHD, PDD, OCD, Tourette's, depression, anxiety and various learning differences. Glenholme's Summer Program not only captures the essence of summer fun, but also provides a platform for students to learn and practice valuable social skills. Through competition, team development, and skill building activities, young people make new friendships, gain confidence, and learn to respect their fellow campers and staff. By actively participating in a positive and productive environment, students experience a newfound sense of community and belonging.

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO SUMMER SESSION '12

If you're a standout, you'll fit right in.

There is a difference between communicating ideas and experiencing them. It's the difference between memorizing a foreign language and thinking in one. Between studying ruins and excavating them. Between analyzing dreams and living them. The difference is huge. And it's the very essence of the University of Chicago Summer Session. Where students are engaged at every level—intellectually, socially, personally, and professionally. Where you can benefit from the value of taking university courses in an accelerated, intensive format. Join us this summer for an extraordinary learning experience at the academic home to more than 85 Nobel laureates.

For students in high school, college, and beyond.

June 18–August 24, 2012, 3, 4, 5, or 6-week sessions

French Woods Festival of the Performing Arts

The Individually programmed summer camp

Nestled in the Upstate New York Catskills is America's leading performing arts facility where every child chooses their own individual schedule, from more than 80 activities run by certified teachers and counselor specialists.

We offer great programs in music, art, theater, sports, circus, adventure, waterfront, magic, dance, and horseback riding in four, 3-week sessions. Send your children to the most exciting place they will ever spend the summer, where they can learn and grow in a nurturing environment.

"My name is Emily. I've been going to French Woods for the past 2 years. I love camp more than anything in this world and here are some reasons why:

I get to try new things that I would never get to try at home (Circus, Magic, Silk-screen etc.).

All the people here are SO nice!

The environment itself is a loving place. No one gets judged and you can really be who you are.

French Woods is my time to shine, I love to perform and FW gives me the opportunity.

CAMP MI-A-KON-DA

RR # 2, Dunchurch, Ontario,
CANADA, P0A 1G0

Toll free: 877-642-5663 Fax: 905-648-1305

Web: www.miakonda.com Email: plamont@miakonda.com

Established in 1955, Mi-A-Kon-Da is a summer camp for girls ages 7 to 16 who come from locations across Canada and around the world. Nestled amongst 200-year-old majestic pine trees in the heart of the Canadian Shield, Mi-A-Kon-Da is situated on beautiful Birch Island, near Parry Sound, Muskoka, and Algonquin Park, Ontario.

This private 24-acre island consists of secluded sandy beaches, calm bays, nature trails and granite rock outcroppings providing incredible views—all which serve as an outstanding backdrop for the wide range of activities that Mi-A-Kon-Da offers. Campers live in spacious tent cabins in groups of 4-5 campers of similar age.

Due to its unique camp size, the Mi-A-Kon-Da activity program has been designed to provide each camper with a wide selection of water and land-based activities—choices that campers make for themselves based on their interest level.

Providing rich overnight summer camping experiences for girls aged 7 - 16 since 1955, Camp Mi-A-Kon-Da is a fully accredited Ontario Camping Association residential summer camp for girls.

The caring, friendly and highly trained staff will make the Mi-A-Kon-Da experience unforgettable. Utilizing a high staff to camper ratio, Mi-A-Kon-Da will provide the safest and most enjoyable camping experience possible.

Mr. Tim Seeley, Director

Imagine yourself enjoying friends you've made from around the world; feeling a sense of real accomplishment from having studied things that interest you and will help you in your next year of school; remembering the fun times you had on trips to places like Boston and Martha's Vineyard; looking forward to improving your new-found skills in sports and other activities you had never tried before. Imagine, too, that you have been challenged to think about life, what it means to be a good person and how to become the person you want to be. And imagine that all these thoughts are enveloped in an experience that from start to finish was fun, challenging, exciting, and never dull for a moment.

That's what the Portsmouth Abbey Summer Program can do for you. Set on 500 beautiful acres on the shores of Narragansett Bay in Rhode Island, with full use of Portsmouth Abbey's magnificent facilities, the Summer Program is designed for students rising into grades 7-10 who want to get a look at important material for the coming year, take a class that their home school might not offer, and are seeking a little adventure that will introduce them to new people, activities and places.

If this sounds like you, whether you are interested in getting a sense of what boarding school is like or just want to have a fantastic summer experience, please contact me, and we can talk about what a month at the Portsmouth Abbey Summer Program can do for you.

What's the best kind of summer? One that's both fun and intense, full of activities and friends, where you share countless experiences together — and where you also achieve far more than you thought you could.

Cushing Academy's five-week Summer Session is this kind of summer. Students ages 12-18 from across the country and all over the world come here in July to participate in our dynamic on-campus programs in academics and visual arts.

In just five weeks, you'll make tremendous academic or artistic progress while also enjoying arts and athletic electives, organized excursions in Boston and around New England, and amazing new friendships that will last a lifetime. It's exciting, it's exhilarating — and it'll give you a competitive edge. Above all, your memories of a summer at Cushing will last a lifetime!

ACADEMIC PROGRAMS

Academic programs are arranged in alphabetical state order, and within each state, programs are arranged alphabetically first by town and then name. An index beginning on page 41 lists programs by features, as shown in the Table of Contents.

For academic-year programs, see The Handbook of Private Schools, an annual descriptive survey of independent education, and Schools Abroad of Interest to Americans, a worldwide guide to elementary and secondary schools with English-speaking programs. For details, please visit www.portersargent.com or see page 880.

SIG enrolls high-aptitude students at colleges across the country. The program combines introductory and college-level academics with cultural courses and traditional recreational summer camp activities. Pupils typically take either two or three academic classes, one or two arts/recreational courses, and one study/tutorial selection during each five-period weekday. Evening entertainment, Saturday field trips and weekend pursuits round out the program. Balancing academics and recreation, ABTS helps students prepare for the upcoming school year and for future educational endeavors. Pupils select four courses and learn in a small-class setting that enables faculty to address different learning styles and provide individual attention. Students choose either a four-week enrichment option or a five-week credit-bearing program that offers remediation only. Course work includes offerings in the traditional disciplines, ESL and various elective areas. A mandatory evening study hall operates five nights weekly. Afternoon activities and weekend excursions round out the program.

This intensive academic program serves high schoolers from groups that are traditionally underrepresented in higher education, particularly those who are African-American or Latino or who come from low-income families. Students enroll in two faculty-taught core courses, math/problem solving and critical inquiry, as well as in two electives that are taught by Pomona College undergraduates. Rising seniors may apply for the program only if they attended PAYS during a previous summer. Boys and girls return home each weekend.

Academic Connections' curriculum consists of college-level course work in the physical and social sciences, engineering, and the arts and humanities. UCSD doctoral candidates generally teach the courses, which meet in five-hour blocks every weekday. Small classes (limited to 22 students each) emphasize active learning. An optional SAT test-taking workshop operates two nights per week, and students may meet with campus admissions representatives one evening a week. Offered for a slightly higher cost than the traditional three-week program, a weeklong, strictly residential session in Hawaii focuses on global environmental leadership and sustainability.

Exceptionally talented students from around the country spend two weeks at Thomas Aquinas College reading and discussing works from such figures as Plato, Euclid, Sophocles, Pascal, Boethius and St. Thomas Aquinas with college faculty. During the first week of the program, boys and girls ponder questions of moral, political and religious authority, then consider the relationship between faith and reason. The second and final week begins with a Shakespearean examination of the imperfection and corruption of man, progresses to a discussion of Euclidean geometry and concludes with readings designed to spur further consideration of key issues of the session. Organized recreation and off-campus excursions balance academics.

Held at Stanford University, these residential programs serve motivated and academically talented middle school and high school pupils. Students enroll in intensive courses, taught by Stanford professors, on topics that are not typically available at the participant's grade level. Children in the Middle School Program (entering grades 7 and 8) study several related topics within a single subject area while getting an early exposure to college life. The more focused High School Program involves the intensive study of a single course.

This precollege program allows accomplished boys and girls who have completed grades 11 or 12 (or, in the case of particularly mature students, grade 10) to sample college life while taking undergraduate courses and earning Stanford University credit. Residential pupils register for at least eight units of course work during the eight-week session, commuters at least three units. In addition to the varied selection of college courses, boys and girls may participate in voluntary classes and seminars designed to prepare them for a successful transition to college; options address the college admission process, study skills and time management, and expository writing, among others. Field trips, intramural athletics, outreach projects, coastal excursions and informal discussions with Stanford faculty complement class work.

Designed for students entering grades 7-10, ACCESS CHESHIRE provides four weeks of advanced study in the arts and sciences. All American participants enroll in one of five academic clusters; themes center around forensic science, Chinese language and culture, human endurance and strength, green engineering and sustainability, and media and society. A sixth option addressing American culture is open only to international students. Late afternoons provide time for sports and other recreation, and boys and girls may take part in various musical endeavors. Scheduled on Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday afternoons, off-campus activities take the form of museum and gallery visits, beach outings, mountain hikes, whale-watching voyages, amusement park trips, a weekend trip to Boston, and excursions to professional baseball games.

Boys and girls who have completed at least one year of high school enroll in one or two undergraduate courses suited to their interests, background and previous academic achievement. Alongside current Georgetown students, pupils choose from more than 100 offerings in the arts, foreign language, business, math, science, computers and the social sciences. Participants benefit from the services available through the university, take part in programs designed by the counseling staff, and learn the importance of time management. Activities include recreational options, trips to nearby theatrical performances and sporting events, and community service opportunities. Students may enroll in two sessions with the director's approval.

CTD offers four academic programs for high-achieving students. Leapfrog (grades pre-K-3) is a weeklong enrichment curriculum offered in a language arts track and a math/science track. Apogee participants (grades 4-6) immerse themselves in a single intensive course. The Spectrum program (grades 7 and 8) enables pupils to complete a year- or semester-long honors-level course in three weeks. In Equinox (grades 9-12), a master teacher experienced with gifted adolescents teaches each course. The latter three programs meet for five hours each weekday and have homework requirements, while Leapfrog offers both half- and full-day enrollment options.

Conducted on the McNeese State University campus for boys and girls whose score on an acceptable aptitude test is in the 96th percentile or higher, GPGC employs a project-based method in which students engage in independent individual and group projects. This approach enables pupils to maintain and stimulate their interest levels in areas ranging from the humanities to the fine arts to the social sciences. Information acquisition is secondary to the development of thinking and problem-solving skills. GPGC operates two divisions: Junior Division students follow the prescribed curriculum in science, humanities and composition, while Senior Division students (generally 15- and 16-year-olds) take college courses taught by McNeese State faculty. The program is not limited to Louisiana residents, although out-of-state students pay a higher tuition rate.

CTY conducts advanced programs in a range of disciplines for academically talented youth at colleges and preparatory schools in five states. Programs for young students include day-only courses for boys and girls who have completed grades 2-4 and residential programs for those who have completed grades 5 and 6; eligibility is based on School and College Abilities Test (SCAT) scores. CTY courses for students who have completed grade 7 or above require SAT, ACT or SCAT scores above the mean for college-bound high school seniors; the Academic Expressions program features courses with less selective eligibility requirements. A global issues program at Princeton University serves pupils who have completed grades 10-12.

Enrolling a diverse student body drawn from around the world, Andover maintains a selection of approximately 60 courses in all major disciplines. The individualized program features a low student-faculty ratio and small classes. As the Summer Session provides in-depth study of the material, pupils may take only two courses. In addition to class work, the program includes afternoon recreation, college counseling workshops and trips to nearby colleges, social and cultural opportunities, and a dormitory setting that approximates collegiate living. Rising eighth graders take part in the Lower School Institutes, in which boys and girls pursue an integrated curriculum in two areas of study: math/biology and literature/performance/film.

Highly qualified high schoolers who have completed their sophomore, junior or senior year may enroll for college credit in the full range of Harvard summer undergraduate courses. The college preparatory program includes study skills workshops, a college fair and trips to other colleges. Summer seminars, based on Harvard's freshman seminars, are limited to 15 students and allow for classroom discussions, close attention to writing and opportunities for independent research under a faculty member. Dances, trivia bowl, a talent show, musical groups, sports, and sightseeing excursions around Boston and New England are among the SSP's activities. SSP also offers distance-learning courses featuring online course materials, discussions and video lectures.

NMH's Middle School Program (entering grades 7-9) provides a small-class environment in which motivated children take two major courses in the morning, along with a minor afternoon class. Boys and girls play sports in the afternoon. Students entering grades 10-12 may enroll in the College Prep Program, during which they pursue one intensive course three hours each morning (Monday through Saturday). In addition, a sport and an afternoon lab or a minor course convene four afternoons per week. College Prep pupils also spend a few days of the session participating in a community work program. Extracurricular activities typically include both on-campus events and optional trips to beaches, summer theater, an amusement park, classical music concerts, museums and professional baseball games.

This free program for boys and girls who have completed junior year operates at several college sites around the country. At each location, TASP students attend an academic seminar that meets each weekday morning for about three hours. Two professors lead each seminar, which is organized around group discussions rather than lectures. Professors meet individually with pupils to discuss writing assignments; instructors do not grade these assignments, instead issuing written comments. Students also attend guest lectures and deliver speeches on topics that interest them.

The Summer Scholars Program enables rising high school juniors and seniors to enroll in college-level courses in various disciplines. Students spend 16 to 20 hours in class each week and take advantage of the cultural amenities and educational opportunities of the city and the university during their free time. Staff plan one large outing each weekend, as well as frequent social events on weekday evenings. Weekly seminars deliver information on college admission, financial assistance and career planning.

Limited to New Jersey residents, NJSP brings highly motivated rising seniors from diverse socioeconomic, ethnic and racial backgrounds to the Lawrenceville School campus for five weeks of college-level study. Program topics, which rotate biennially, are interdisciplinary in nature. Each day begins with a whole-group lecture, after which boys and girls attend morning and afternoon group seminars and engage in extensive reading assignments and research at museums and libraries. Students work closely with college faculty to produce a 10- to 15-page research paper, and they also contribute to an arts festival that is thematically related to the academic curriculum. Each pupil must be nominated by his or her guidance counselor.

The program enrolls high schoolers in two divisions, organized by grade level: one for students entering grades 9 and 10, the other for pupils entering grades 11 and 12. Participants in both sections follow a curriculum designed to meet the interests, talents and needs of college-bound students. The program includes time each day for independent study and tutorials, private meetings with instructors, extracurricular activities, and use of the university's libraries and other facilities. Although these noncredit courses do not culminate in letter grades, participants receive extensive performance evaluations throughout and at course's end.

From their home base at the 92nd Street YMHA, HSNY students learn about New York City through a combination of academics and firsthand exploration of related works of art and architecture. During four hours of class work each morning, participants take courses that examine the history, architecture and art of the city. Pupils spend the afternoon hours visiting such sites as City Hall, the Chrysler Building and the Empire State Building in the company of New York architects. Applicants need not have any background knowledge of art or architecture.

Conducted by The Clarkson School, a division of Clarkson University that serves talented high schoolers, Young Scholars takes an interdisciplinary approach to examining and solving a problem from three different perspectives: business, engineering and ethics/social values. The program topic changes each year. Students conduct research individually and in small groups, then prepare a final presentation for campus and community leaders. During the course of the week, boys and girls further develop their communicational and cooperative problem-solving skills. Families are welcome to attend the final presentation.

Summer College's six-week programs enable high schoolers to explore academic and career interests while earning college credit. Students enrolling in the liberal arts program choose two courses from Syracuse's undergraduate humanities and social sciences offerings. Preprofessional programs in engineering and computer science, law and public communications require one specialized course plus one complementary elective, and studio/lab programs in acting and musical theater, architecture, fashion design, interior design and forensic science combine course work with substantial studio or laboratory time. Summer College also offers two-week noncredit programs in studio arts, interior design and management, as well as a two-week education program with both credit and noncredit options. Field trips and guest lecturers enrich the curriculum, and staff schedule various weekend activities.

Middle and high school students sample university course work and social life during SEP. Courses, which vary annually, feature a variety of topics in the arts and sciences, each taught at an introductory college level with no tests or assigned homework. Students live in residence halls in groups divided by age and gender, and evening activity options include sports, filmmaking, scavenger hunts, talent shows, dances and movie nights.

Summer at Delphi blends academics, sports, challenging activities and weekend trips. Additionally, students may brush up on weak areas, get ahead in others, or take advantage of such curricular opportunities as computers, outdoor courses and special-interest projects. Delphi tailors each program to the individual pupil. One-on-one assistance is available, and individual progress speed is not related to that of the student's classmates. Those who have mastered the basics may proceed to advanced subjects or explore new areas. An ESL program serves boys and girls seeking to improve their English language skills. See Also Page 40

Conducted at the Honors College of the Indiana University of Pennsylvania, the Summer Honors Program enables rising high school juniors and seniors (and particularly able rising sophomores) to live and study in a university setting. In the morning, students attend a specialized course in a discipline such as physics, journalism or forensic science. Afternoons are devoted to a core course in which boys and girls develop critical thinking skills through group discussions, writing and presentations. In this interdisciplinary core course, pupils further develop their critical-thinking skills in the process of analyzing arguments and participating in group discussions, writing assignments and group presentations.

Rising high school juniors and seniors take either one or two University of Pennsylvania undergraduate courses for college credit through the Pre-College Program. Students enrolling in only one credit-bearing course also take a noncredit learning skills enrichment course; students taking two credit courses pay a higher tuition rate. Curricular offerings comprise introductory courses in the arts and sciences. Students are integrated into the university's regular summer courses and are subject to the same academic standards. Weekly workshops seek to bridge the gap between high school and college. Various social activities balance academics.

Summer Study allows students who have completed grade 10, 11 or 12 to take freshman-level courses for college credit while also experiencing university life. Each pupil enrolls in one or two college-credit classes, an enrichment offering and the Pathways to College guidance course. Shorter enrichment programs for pupils entering grades 10-12 enroll participants in two or three noncredit classes. Students in both programs may perform community service, enroll in SAT prep courses and visit nearby colleges on weekends. Two- and four-week enrichment programs serve students entering grade 9.

The university provides two divisions of summer courses in the sciences, social sciences and humanities for qualified high school students. Seven-week Summer Session Credit Courses allow rising seniors and new high school graduates to earn college credit in two courses that they take alongside undergraduates; these classes are equivalent to first-year Brown courses. Separate one- to three-week, noncredit Pre-College Courses are offered on an ungraded basis to pupils entering grade 10 or higher. Students take one or two classes per session and may attend multiple sessions. Courses include daily assignments, group work, site visits, labs and hands-on projects. Participants in both programs attend events and social activities and have wide use of Brown's athletic, academic and recreational facilities. See Also Page 35

VSA offers advanced curricula in math, science and the humanities to gifted students. Taught by Vanderbilt professors, lecturers and graduate students, courses integrate resources from research centers and laboratories. Games, movies, sports and off-campus outings complement academics. Weeklong programs accommodate rising eighth graders who have participated in talent searches, two-week sessions serve pupils entering grades 9 and 10, and three-week courses enroll students entering grades 11 and 12. Three-week Law School 101 and Med School 101 programs operate in conjunction with Vanderbilt's professional schools; admission to both is highly competitive and is distinct from admission into other VSA courses.

This two-week program allows academically advanced high schoolers to take two university-level courses for college credit. TLU faculty and area educators teach the courses in a small-class setting that provides boys and girls with a preview of the college experience. Field trips, a group service project and evening recreational activities round out LSSA's program. Applicants should rank in the top half of their class.

Conducted on the University of Virginia campus, these programs combine morning academic course work with afternoon sports instruction and informal recreation. The Junior Program, serving rising seventh through ninth graders, allows children to choose two enrichment courses each weekday from a varied selection. Tutorials are available in math and writing for an additional fee. For students entering grades 10-12, the Senior Program blends enrichment courses with such offerings as reading comprehension and PSAT and SAT preparation. Other offerings include an ESL program and a fine arts program that features photography, studio art, cinematography and acting classes.

WCATY conducts summer programs for advanced students at the elementary, middle and high school levels. The weeklong Young Students Summer Program, held at Beloit College and serving children in grades 4-6, combines enrichment courses with an exposure to new disciplines. Students in grades 7 and 8 may enroll in the Summer Transitional Enrichment Program, which enables pupils to take one two-week course for enrichment or acceleration. The Accelerated Learning Program (grades 9-12) consists of an intensive three-week course for each student. ALP courses are equivalent to an honors-level high school class or a semester-long college course.

Course work emphasizes writing and communicational skills and classes take a hands-on approach in this program, which operates at Peterhouse College. Each student takes two courses, one as a major and one as a minor. Major courses convene six mornings per week and entail both homework and project and preparation time; minor courses meet three afternoons a week, with all work contained within the class session. Cultural excursions to dramatic performances, art galleries, museums and historical sites enrich the program.

In a small-class and tutorial setting, students preview university life as they choose from courses that are modeled after the Oxford and Cambridge tutorial system. The program's Oxford- and Cambridge-educated instructors teach in classes limited to four to six pupils, and time is also allotted for one-on-one tutorials. In addition, students may attend academic skills workshops relating to such topics as college applications, interviewing skills, debating and lateral methods of thinking. Cultural and sightseeing trips complete the program.

Conducted at Oxford University, this precollege program provides a rigorous academic program in a small-class environment for students who have completed grades 10-12. Pupils take two courses during the session, one as a major and one as a minor. Major courses, which meet six mornings per week, include homework and require additional project and preparation time. Less intensive minor courses meet three afternoons weekly and demand no work outside the classroom. Faculty schedule frequent excursions to local cultural events.

Divided between central Paris and the university town of Aix-en-Provence, this Excel program provides students with field-based seminars that lead to an exploration of French history, art and culture. Pupils may choose either to refine their French language skills or to gain a deeper understanding of the country through course work that emphasizes France. Each student chooses one major course and one minor course; both meet throughout the program (three full days weekly for major classes and two full days per week for minor courses). Instructors make significant use of the cultural and historical opportunities presented by the two cities.

This interdisciplinary humanities course takes high schoolers to Greece for the study of ancient Greek drama in its literary and social contexts and its place of origin. Excursions to archaeological sites and museums in and around Athens supplement the classroom portion of the program, which is conducted on the island of Spetses. Program directors guide students in close readings and critical analysis of selected works by Aeschylus, Sophocles, Euripides, and Aristophanes. Language instruction in modern Greek is part of the curriculum, and participants may attend dance classes, poetry readings and festivals.

The Irish Way provides an introduction to Ireland's history and traditions. Destinations include the cities of Dublin, Waterford, Killarney and Galway, where students live in traditional Irish boarding schools. Irish secondary school teachers conduct structured sessions in Irish language, literature, history and culture. Supplementary field trips and city excursions enrich the program. Students work on a group research project and have time to explore local host communities on their own. Participants tour the west coast of Ireland at the end of the session.

A collaborative effort between Columbia and the University of Barcelona, this three-week enrichment program takes place at the Spanish university. Participants examine the history, the art and the urban development of Barcelona while also enriching their understanding of how European communities forge local, regional, national and international identities. A Spanish-language workshop (offered at all ability levels) supplements the three-course curriculum. Boys and girls devote two Fridays to enriching, program-related excursions. In lieu of grades, pupils receive written evaluations from their instructors upon successful completion of the program.

TASIS Middle School Program (ages 11-13) and TASIS Summer Program (ages 14-18) balance academic subjects with intensive recreational and athletic activities. Students choose one course of study from a selection that comprises French, Italian, English as a Second Language, the performing and visual arts, and photography. Language instruction emphasizes spoken fluency and includes frequent practice time in the school's language lab. Courses in the performing and arts combine class work with off-campus enrichment trips. Regular homework assignments and compulsory evening study hall reinforce classroom learning. Younger children (ages 4-10) may enroll in Le Chateau des Enfants (see separate listing).

ACADEMIC PROGRAMS FOR STUDENTS WITH LEARNING DISABILITIES

The Summer Transition Program helps students with learning disabilities, attention deficit disorder or Asperger's syndrome develop the skills necessary for a successful college career. Depending on the year, students enroll in one three-credit introductory course in either psychology or sociology. In small-group review sessions each morning, staff members assist students with writing assignments and test preparation. Afternoon study skills and tutoring sessions provide instruction in note taking, textbook reading, memorization and other study skills. Academic orientation and self-advocacy seminars, held twice weekly, help students access university and community resources and develop skills that will ease the transition to college life. Students live in residence halls, play recreational sports on campus and visit local attractions.

Little Keswick serves boys of low-average to superior intelligence who have a history of learning, emotional or behavioral difficulties. The structured program features a selection of traditional recreational activities—among them woodcraft, riding, hiking, swimming and sports—in addition to a strong therapeutic component. While LKS gives admission preference to year-round students, boys may enroll for the summer program only.

Oakland's highly individualized program, which features one-on-one instruction, emphasizes the improvement of reading skills. Courses cover reading, English composition, phonics, word analysis, math and study skills. The summer session serves boys and girls with learning disabilities (including nonverbal learning disabilities), visual and auditory processing disorders, attentional disorders and organizational difficulties. Recreational activities on the 450-acre campus include swimming, sports, art and music instruction, and horseback riding.

ACADEMIC PROGRAMS— SPECIALIZED

Specialized summer academic boarding programs are arranged alphabetically by name. The Table of Contents lists the subject areas presented, and an index beginning on page 160 lists the programs under each of those subjects.

For academic-year programs, see The Handbook of Private Schools, an annual descriptive survey of independent education, and Schools Abroad of Interest to Americans, a worldwide guide to elementary and secondary schools with English-speaking programs. Abbey Road conducts a number of summer programs in Europe designed to facilitate cross-cultural understanding and enrichment through cultural immersion, intensive language study, exposure to new academic subjects, travel opportunities and recreational pursuits. Pupils may study French in Aix-en-Provence, Antibes, Beaulieu, Cannes (which also features precollege work), Cassis and St-Laurent, France; Italian in Amalfi, Bologna (which also includes precollege work) and Florence, Italy; and Spanish in Cadiz and Sanlucar, Spain. A separate program enables boys and girls to travel from the Italian cities of Athens, Rome and Florence to a final destination of Paris, France. This cultural immersion program serves as a hands-on study of Western civilization. In addition to the European sessions, Abbey Road conducts a French-immersion program in Quebec, Canada, as well as two programs in the US for American students: a precollege enrichment and SAT preparation session in Boston, MA, and an environmental studies program in Santa Barbara, CA.

This British-style boarding school combines morning language instruction in English, French, German or Spanish with afternoon sports and other activities. Lessons, which are offered at introductory, intermediate and advanced levels, place emphasis on both conversational and written skills development. Each student receives approximately 48 hours of language instruction during the session. Often adventurous in nature, activities make significant use of the school's surroundings. Staff schedule a camping trip and several cultural excursions.

AmeriSpan's immersion programs expose teenagers to foreign languages both in the classroom and the community. In addition to daily classroom study, students participate in organized sports and excursions or explore their surroundings independently. Three program options offer varying levels of schoolwork and supervision. Residential summer camps include dormitory living, structured activities and strict curfews. Students in the supervised programs live with host families with some supervision. Unsupervised programs allow mature 16- to 18-year-olds to participate in AmeriSpan's adult program with no curfews or organized activities.

Conducted by the Walter Cronkite School of Journalism and Mass Communication at ASU's downtown campus, the Summer Journalism Institute comprises two tracks: the Broadcast Institute and the Print Journalism Institute. Both institutes seek to prepare high schoolers for college journalism studies while letting them explore future career options in a college setting. The Broadcast Institute features classes on writing, reporting, videography and editing; the opportunity to anchor, report, write, produce and direct a newscast; chances to meet and converse with broadcast professionals; and visits to local radio and television stations. The Print Journalism Institute includes classes on writing, editing, layout, design and photojournalism; discussions with professional journalists who provide advice on media careers; production of a newspaper; and visits to Phoenix media outlets.

MSHP provides opportunities for Arizona residents from backgrounds traditionally underrepresented in the fields of math and science to begin university-level instruction while still in high school. Two five-week sessions offer three college credits, and an eight-week course yields four credits. Pupils complete daily homework, take quizzes twice a week and take weekly tests. Faculty provide tutoring and problem-solving sessions in the evening, and a variety of academic presentations and activities are scheduled during each session. High school graduates may enroll only if they are preparing for freshman year at Arizona State.

Held on the campuses of Cornell University and the University of California-Santa Cruz, ASMP enables gifted math pupils to hone their problem-solving skills while exploring advanced topics in detail. Many participants seek to improve their performance in national math contests. Taught by distinguished faculty and Olympiad coaches from the US and abroad, lectures focus on number theory, Euclidean geometry, algebraic inequalities and techniques, modular arithmetic and computational geometry. A 90-minute problem-solving seminar (with active student participation) follows each teaching session.

Ball State's CAP Summer Workshop provides rising high school juniors and seniors with an intensive immersion into environmental design and problem solving. Faculty lead a series of exercises intended to both challenge students and encourage creative expression. Boys and girls engage in six hours of daily studio time, then have some unscheduled blocks in the evening to experience college life. A field trip study tour that includes bus travel to a major metropolitan city enriches classroom instruction. During the tour, participants analyze and document cultural aspects of the city's design and planning.

The Young Women's Leadership Institute focuses on the relationship between leadership and gender. Girls devote mornings to classes in gender studies and social issues, then spend their afternoons engaged in workshops, seminars and discussions. Students design and execute community service projects in small groups, and reading and writing assignments are also part of the program. In addition, Leadership Institute participants meet with Barnard alumnae in their workplaces to learn about different occupations and the educational or professional training they require.

Designed for middle schoolers who have demonstrated noteworthy ability in science, SPARK provides students with an intellectual examination of concepts and familiar topics. Boys and girls attend class for four hours each morning, then take part in lab sessions or embark on field trips on Tuesday and Thursday afternoons. While the main program lasts for one week, a special two-week program focuses on the ecology of Narragansett Bay. This noncompetitive program features no tests or grades. Extracurricular activities and social events balance academics.

CSQR provides rising high school juniors and seniors with a substantial college-level experience as they see how social scientists think about the world, measure important variables of study, prepare research and present their findings. Participants undertake hands-on examination of theories in three core disciplines—international relations, economics and psychology—as they collaborate on the design and the execution of an original research project with peers and a faculty advisor. The program's structure helps students to understand major theories and concepts in the three disciplines, as well as the manner in which social scientists study them. During the session, pupils use quantitative data to support written and oral arguments, learn to rigorously test hypotheses with statistical data, and gain experience in thinking through central problems and research questions while measuring relevant variables.

This intensive, five-week program enrolls middle school girls with a strong interest in math and science; advanced knowledge in these areas is not necessary. The institute seeks to build knowledge through hands-on projects, cooperative learning and team building; use of technology, including graphing calculators, computer spreadsheets, statistics software and word processors; research skill and technique instruction; and enriching field trips. The program culminates with an independent research project: Each student conducts library research on a topic of interest and formulates a scientific hypothesis, then designs and performs an experiment to test the hypothesis.

Christchurch offers two age-based marine science programs. For campers ages 8-11, Chesapeake Critter Camp involves the weeklong exploration of creatures dwelling in and around the Rappahannock River and Chesapeake Bay watersheds. Children search for insect and animal life while on foot or in a boat. Older boys and girls (ages 12-15) engage in a hands-on examination of the wetlands of the Chesapeake Bay Watersheds. Campers gain a better understanding of the wetlands and their importance by walking, crawling and swimming through swamps, bogs, and fresh- and saltwater marshes.

A collaboration between the Civic Education Project at Northwestern University's Center for Talent Development and Johns Hopkins University's Center for Talented Youth, CLI integrates rigorous academics, community service and hands-on field experiences. This program for talented high schoolers emphasizes knowledge acquisition and leadership skills development. An introductory course in civic engagement and contemporary social issues explores challenges affecting communities through active discussions and group projects. Students engage in service-learning projects in urban neighborhoods, meet with community leaders, and attend special seminars and guest speaker presentations. Boys and girls apply through Northwestern CTD for the CLI program hosted by the University of Illinois-Chicago, or through Johns Hopkins CTY for sessions at John Hopkins University or San Francisco State University.

Students enrolled in this intensive precollege program explore the relationship between humans and the environment. ITT begins with an introduction to the ecology, the history and the culture of the Maine coast, taught from an interdisciplinary perspective that incorporates marine biology, oceanography, anthropology and literature. Boys and girls conduct marine research at island field stations; learn the basics of navigation, steering and ship handling aboard a research vessel; examine the lives of coastal Maine residents; and work on their reading and writing skills with college faculty. At the conclusion of the program, pupils work in teams on multimedia presentations that detail their experiences.

This intensive program for rising high school juniors and seniors begins on the College of the Atlantic campus with an introduction to the history and policy of the northern Maine woods. Students learn about the natural history, literature, conservation and psychological aspects of wilderness and river systems through readings and discussion. Participants then explore Acadia National Park and canoe down the Allagash Wilderness Waterway. These expeditions serve as a laboratory to experience and investigate group dynamics in a wilderness setting while also examining leadership, authority and community. A group presentation at session's end enables students to share samples of their writings and photographs with program peers and professors and the public.

Activities include a trawling expedition aboard Sea Lab's research vessel, exploration of the salt marshes of Dauphin Island, and beachcombing and bird watching on nearby Sand Island. A second program, High School Summer Course, is an accredited, four-week marine science class for rising 10th through 12th graders. During this four-week program, students conduct an intensive exploration of marine science through 150 hours of supervised academic activities in the form of lectures, laboratory work and field pursuits.

Participants in this intensive two-week program attend architecture classes taught by Drexel faculty members in on-campus studios and computer labs. Students work closely with instructors on architectural design, attend lectures by distinguished speakers, embark on field trips to some of the city's noteworthy architectural sites and meet area architects at their offices. Pupils devote most afternoons in the studio developing design projects through drawings and models; some evening studio work is also likely. The session culminates in a formal presentation to faculty and invited professionals.

Sally Ride Science Camp enables girls to explore science, technology and engineering through such hands-on activities as the construction of rockets, robots and marine habitats. Each student chooses a science major that includes several small labs and a substantial culminating project. Four-day programs allow girls to choose between an introduction to marine science and an introduction to engineering; five- and seven-day sessions provide a choice between marine biology and astronomy; and the 10-day advanced program offers another two options: advanced marine science/marine ecology and robotics. Afternoon and evening enrichment activities take the form of workshops, experiments, guest speakers and recreational pursuits.

The program combines two-week Spanish language immersion in either Chile or Argentina with cultural experiences and adventure treks. Instruction emphasizes four basics of language learning: reading, writing, speaking and listening. Beginning, intermediate and advanced pupils enroll in small classes of roughly seven or eight students. Participants learn about the host country by attending local workshops, touring nearby cities, and visiting important monuments and museums. A four-week option enables students to take part in both the Chilean and the Argentine programs.

Intelligent, highly motivated high schoolers work both individually and in small groups during this rigorous program. HCSSiM participants investigate concrete problems, seek patterns and generalizations, formulate conjectures in the language of mathematics and apply insight and experience to the creation of proofs. For the first three weeks, college professors lead workshops covering undergraduate-level content in number theory, combinatorics/graph theory, modern algebra and other topics from outside the usual secondary school and early college curricula. Students then select one maxi-course (covering a semester-long elective's worth of material) and two minicourses. Most faculty live on campus and join students for meals and recreational activities.

The Hotchkiss SES program emphasizes hands-on field research, data collection and analysis techniques. Boys and girls begin by studying the basic aquatic and terrestrial ecology of the surrounding lakes, streams, woods, fields and farmland. They then connect with working environmental scientists on field projects that range from invasive species monitoring to global climate change modeling. Students who return for a second summer analyze data and formulate strategies for solving environmental problems; in their third summer, SES participants intern with local environmental organizations. Operated at more than 60 university campuses in the US and Canada, these one- and two-week computer camps provide the following courses: digital video and movie production, multimedia and game creation, software programming and robotics, and Web design and graphic arts. Programming platforms include iPhone and iPad, Google Android, and Xbox 360. Campers, who take one course per week, may enroll for additional weeks to further study one subject or to explore different topics. Many courses are available at the beginning through advanced levels, while some require prior experience in the subject area.

Following a program developed by Johns Hopkins University, students apply their knowledge of math and science to hands-on projects and laboratory work pertaining to engineering. Boys and girls attend college-level lectures, test theories, solve problems and generate solutions. As a complement to classroom work, students also learn from practicing engineers about career possibilities, internships and educational opportunities within the field. In addition to the residential and day program at Johns Hopkins, Engineering Innovation operates comparable day sessions at locations across the country. Applicants should have spreadsheet knowledge, as well as experience with lab science, algebra II and trigonometry.

At Georgetown, Princeton and Stanford universities, high school students follow a curriculum that includes a systematic introduction to American government and politics, a speaker program and student debates on current issues. The collegiate academic environment stresses substantial reading, research and writing. Meeting six days each week, classes are equivalent to one-semester high school honors or Advanced Placement courses. AP exam preparation is offered in US government, comparative government, US history and macroeconomics. The Georgetown program includes a high-level speakers program that takes students around Washington, DC, to meet with political leaders.

After spending a week studying on the MSU campus, high-achieving students entering grades 11 and 12 spend two weeks touring and studying in Beijing, Hangzhou, Xi'an and Shanghai, China. Each day begins with a three-hour class on a topic such as the following: the physical and cultural geography of China; Chinese historical themes; the creation of a unified China; Confucianism and the Confucian state; Buddhism and the creation of the Daoist religion; poetry and literature; international trade; the establishment of the People's Republic of China; and contemporary China as viewed through its literature, music, politics and economics. In the afternoon, pupils will take a two-hour introductory Chinese language class (taught by an MSU instructor). Those wishing to earn four college credits may do so by successfully completing four equally weighted course elements: language study, analytical review of a selected book, an annotated journal of impressions and an analysis of time spent in China, and an individual project.

This two-week program for academically talented boys and girls emphasizes math, science and technology, as well as applications in those areas. MST at MSU attempts to challenge students without duplicating course work that is part of the traditional kindergarten through grade 12 curriculum. Pupils investigate problems that can be explored through a better understanding of math, science, engineering and technology; focus on an intensive area of study suited to interdisciplinary research in these subject areas; and become acquainted with possible career fields. In addition to meeting academic requirements, applicants must display evidence of potential in math, science or technology through past competition participation or involvement in extracurricular activities.

A collaborative effort between Middlebury College and the Monterey Institute of International Studies, MMLA conducts four-week residential programs at Green Mountain College in Poultney, VT; Oberlin College in Oberlin, OH; Pomona College in Claremont, CA; and Swarthmore College in Swarthmore, PA. In addition, two- and three-week commuter sessions operate at other locations. Students work on fluency and comprehension skills in Arabic, Mandarin, French, German or Spanish each morning, then spend the rest of the day reinforcing their language skills during meals, field trips and recreational camp activities. MMLA groups pupils by ability level and houses them with others who are studying the same language. Weekend activities for boarders include field trips to local recreational and cultural attractions.

MSOE's summer programs enable students to experience college life as they explore career opportunities in engineering, business or nursing. Introductions to architectural, biomedical, computer, electrical, mechanical/industrial and software engineering include laboratory projects and tours of local industries. Business students learn about mission statements, leadership and teamwork, marketing strategies and presentation techniques. Nursing program participants tour a hospital facility and work closely with MSOE School of Nursing faculty on hands-on activities in a critical-care laboratory. Exceptional rising freshmen may apply to any of these programs.

The governor of each state helps appoint two newly graduated delegates to this free science camp each year. A roster of educators and researchers leads NYSC, which has three main academic components: 60- to 90-minute lectures that are delivered to the entire camp community; directed study, three 90-minute sessions that consist of roughly 10 students and a presenter and typically involve a larger project or trips to a specific ecological area or scientific facility; and seminars, which are sometimes led by delegates and which may be nonscientific and informal. An unusual aspect of NYSC's session is the well-developed outdoor program:

Students engage in a variety of outdoor activities, including overnight backpacking and camping trips that range from short, nature-based hikes to more challenging backpacking treks along rough terrain.

This management and leadership development program consists of high school and college divisions. High school programs operate at Emory University (Atlanta, GA), Columbia University (New York, NY) and the University of Texas-Austin. Senior executives and American Management Association faculty conduct highly interactive, practical workshops that focus upon the skills necessary for success in business. The core curriculum in each program addresses leadership, management, business writing, presentation skills, strategic planning and negotiation. Practice presentations (given to a board of directors) and a full-day management simulation complete the program.

Targeting high school girls and minorities traditionally underrepresented in science and engineering, SESEY places students in research groups from Oregon State University's departments of chemical engineering or bioengineering. Each pupil works with a faculty member and college student mentors on such projects as plastics recycling, biomedical polymers, materials processing, biomedical technology and waste remediation. The program also includes a trip to the Hatfield Marine Science Center, computer instruction and evening recreational programs.

Held at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, this tuition-free program combines on-campus course work with hands-on research experience. The first week of the program is dedicated to college-level classes in mathematics, science, engineering, computer skills and research techniques. Students spend the next four weeks conducting open-ended, relevant research projects at Boston-area colleges, universities, hospitals and corporate facilities, supervised by noted scientists and mathematicians. Students deliver their findings in conference-style oral and written presentations during the final week. Guest lectures, field trips around Boston and a weekend trip to the beach round out the program. Successful applicants should demonstrate superior achievement in math and science in the classroom and beyond. Exceptional students as young as 13 may apply if they have completed grade 11. Participants have been recognized by the Intel Science Talent Search; the Intel International Science and Engineering Fair; and the Siemens Competition in Math, Science & Technology.

SEA conducts three distinct high school seminars for motivated high schoolers and recent graduates interested in science, the sea and learning to sail: Science at SEA (Woods Hole), Oceanography of the Gulf of Maine (Appledore Island, ME) and Oceanography of the Southern California Bight (Catalina Island, CA). Students commence each program with academic course work during a shore component in which they live in a community setting and develop team-building and leadership skills. The second half of each program takes place at sea, where boys and girls gain hands-on experience on a modern sailing research vessel. While at sea, students collect scientific data, set and strike sails, operate sophisticated equipment and help out in the ship's galley.

A select group of high school upperclassmen from Washington State, Oregon, Idaho, Alaska and British Columbia, Canada, who have completed at least three years of high school math may apply for this intensive program. Two instructors lead each of the three two-week blocks; during four of the five weekdays of the week, participants meet with one instructor in the morning, the other in the afternoon. These sessions combine work on math problems with some limited lecture time. On the fifth weekday, SIMUW schedules a special program in which a morning speaker discusses math's role in his or her line of work; in the afternoon, students will either listen to a second speaker or engage in a special activity or field trip related to math. Boys and girls embark on trips to local places of interest on Saturdays, then have Sundays available for group or individual activities.

This precollege enrichment program features college-level instruction in astronomy, math, physics and computer programming for able science students. Working in teams of three, students perform a research project in celestial mechanics from start to finish, in the process determining the orbit of an asteroid using their own observations, measurements and software. Educational and recreational field trips and guest speakers supplement lectures and project work. Although most participants are rising seniors, a handful of academically accelerated rising juniors gain admission each year. SSP operates at two locations: Westmont College in Santa Barbara, CA, and the New Mexico Institute of Mining and Technology in Socorro, NM.

This hands-on introduction to entrepreneurship enables students in grades 10-12 to engage in a simulated experience as a business owner. Pupils learn about finance, banking, stocks and bonds, sales, advertising, global trade issues and the importance of effective collaboration. As owner of a theoretical business, each student acquires seed money, hires personnel, pays expenses, manages inventory, and sells his or her company. Faculty and staff from the university's Sigmund Weis School of Business conduct the program.

TASS, held on two college campuses, is a free, six-week program in which rising juniors interested in African-American studies explore this area and other topics that address diversity in society. After convening for a three-hour seminar each weekday morning with two college professors, students spend the remainder of the day completing reading, writing and oral-presentation assignments with the assistance of college-age tutors; watching films related to their seminar topic; and attending guest lectures. Undergraduate student-tutors live in residence halls with TASS pupils, working with them on critical reading and writing skills. Outside the classroom, boys and girls have opportunities to attend cultural events and explore the host institution.

AIM allows rising high school seniors to sample life at the US Coast Guard Academy while also completing an engineering project and engaging in military training. The physically demanding weeklong session approximates the undergraduate experience at the academy. Applicants must be in good health and physical condition and must not be colorblind, have asthma or have vision that is not correctable to 20/20. Roughly half of AIM graduates earn appointments to the academy.

Students who have recently completed grades 11 and 12 may apply to this free program if they meet one or more of the following qualifications: are economically disadvantaged or come from an ethnic minority background, live in a rural area of Alaska, are a first-generation American or speak English as a second language. The six-week program encourages students to pursue their interest in a career in medicine or another healthcare field through educational enrichment activities and job shadowing. Boys and girls also gain an introduction to college life. During the session, students complete a public health research project; rising seniors will share these projects with their home communities during the following school year.

This apprentice-level research opportunity for rising high school juniors and seniors involves extensive laboratory experience (85 percent of the session time). The program focuses on original research that includes experimental design, data collection, statistical analysis, and the communication of results through both written and oral means. YSP's six-week session features morning lectures, group study, educational excursions, seminars, and individual and group instruction time. Students complete research notebooks, write an article describing the research project and its conclusions, make a presentation of the individual project at a research symposium and present their research to pupils at the home high school.

on contemporary art and popular culture through the completion of a credit-bearing, pass-fail course. The two-week program comprises 80 hours of required lab time, lectures and discussions; 40 hours of field trip time; and daily written compositions that reflect upon lectures and the daily science topic. During the session, boys and girls further benefit from their interactions with undergraduate science students in two different programs: one dealing with design and media, the other with cutting-edge scientific research.

This intensive training program exposes students to a broad range of biological research laboratory techniques. Using a project-based approach, the course progresses from a survey of basic lab procedures to the application of current molecular techniques in developmental biology and microbiology. Lectures provide background and introduce new concepts, but pupils spend most of their time in labs working on two main projects: mechanisms of antibiotic resistance in bacteria and genetic regulation of development. Students keep lab notebooks, make group presentations and participate in a research forum. Participants earn college credit equivalent to two undergraduate courses.

The tuition-free Research Apprentice Program provides career exploration opportunities for students in the top quarter of their class who represent underserved or economically disadvantaged groups. RAP I, a four-week session for students entering grades 10-11, explores career pathways in either food; human and environmental sciences; or children, families and education. Participants visit corporate facilities, attend seminars and minicourses and work in teams to solve problems. RAP II is an intensive, seven-week laboratory and academic program for previous RAP I students and others entering grade 12 who have an interest in food, agricultural and environmental sciences. Laboratory research topics include plant genetics, animal physiology, nutritional sciences, food chemistry and engineering, veterinary medicine, computer imaging and environmental studies.

Conducted at the University of Illinois-Urbana, GAMES enables high school girls to explore science and engineering through demonstrations, classroom presentations, hands-on activities and meetings with professional women in relevant fields. The Structures program introduces girls entering grades 9 and 10 to civil engineering basics, and campers design and construct bridges, water towers or boats. Also serving girls entering grades 9 and 10, the robotics camp explores computer technology and hands-on robotic development. The bio-imaging program for girls entering grades 9-11 explores biomedical imaging, optics and image analysis. In the chemical engineering program, girls entering grades 9-11 learn about developing medical advances and alternative energy sources in University of Illinois laboratories. Three programs serve students entering grades 10-12: one focusing on aerospace engineering; another on electrical engineering; and a third on energy generation, conversion and efficiency.

The programs, taught by university faculty, allow highly motivated rising high school juniors and seniors to pursue course work in the following areas: broadcast journalism, business, engineering, forensic investigation, health and medicine, international relations, marine science, sports administration and sports medicine. Guest speakers and visits to local sites relevant to the field of study supplement in-class work. Students earn three to six college credits, which are also accepted at many high schools. In addition to the disciplines mentioned above, the university conducts a program focusing on filmmaking (see separate listing for details).

Designed for rising high school seniors, IEP provides students with an overview of the elements of engineering design and computer programming, a discussion of career opportunities in engineering, a chance to meet professional engineers and a preview of college life. In the morning, boys and girls attend two hourlong lectures, while afternoons provide time for hands-on computer sessions and work in the engineering learning center. Pupils write a report on each talk, learn concepts of design and implement them by building systems, and team up with fellow students to compose and deliver a presentation during the program's final week. Two plant trips to nearby engineering facilities complete the curriculum.

This intensive precollege program enrolls rising seniors who have displayed high achievement in math and science, particularly those students of ethnic groups lacking prominent representation in these fields of study. University faculty members teach calculus and research-based science classes in astronomy and computer science. Current Sewanee undergraduates assist the professors and serve as mentors to Bridge Program participants. Students need pay only for their trip to campus, as the university covers all program expenses.

WNDI conducts two- and three-week policy and Lincoln-Douglas debate camps, as well as a weeklong public forum debate session. The first part of the policy debate camp consists of lectures, examples, drills and lab work for affirmative cases, disadvantages, counterplans, kritiks and topicality arguments; the second part features independent research projects, practice and tournament debates, and advanced theory lectures. During the first part of the Lincoln-Douglas camp, the focus is on case construction and value argumentation in both traditional and mainly contemporary styles, along with lab work and practice debates and drills on current Lincoln-Douglas topics. The final week provides time for in-depth topic exploration, extensive work on delivery and presentation, discussion of additional philosophies and value conflict issues, and a round-robin competition. The public forum camp begins with an emphasis on core argument and delivery skills and the development of case and argument preparation. Public forum students engage in frequent practice debates and attend lectures on domestic and international policy.

Boys and girls choose from four levels of ESL instruction: beginning, intermediate, advanced and transition (a bridge course to mainstream English). Faculty devote the entire school day to English instruction in a variety of contexts. Classes seek to develop vocabulary, reading comprehension, oral and written communicational skills, and subject-specific terminology. Experiential education takes the form of afternoon excursions, lectures and student interviews of local citizens.

Summer Field Research students conduct original ecological research projects and earn college credit on 25-mile backpacking trips through the Sierra Nevada Mountains. The program begins at Yosemite Institute's Crane Flat campus, where students learn basic concepts of ecology and natural history as they pertain to the region. Two field researchers lead teams of 12 students, in the process using modern research equipment, recording field observations and identifying patterns, collecting data and presenting their findings to other scientists. Campers also learn and apply lessons in route finding, map and compass use, outdoor leadership, cooking and conservation.

INTERNSHIP PROGRAMS

Internships, which are usually quite competitive, serve able, academically motivated high school students. Participants have a unique opportunity to work on a project at an accelerated level, often alongside college students and field scholars. Unlike programs listed in other sections of the Guide, internships need not necessarily offer boarding. While program administrators generally assist interns with lodging, families may be required to arrange the student's accommodations. Most internships pay a salary or a stipend, however, which helps to defray student expense.

Internship programs are arranged alphabetically by name.

Open to undergraduate, graduate and medical students, this rigorous program also offers a few positions to the most advanced rising high school seniors. Full-time, eight- or nine-week fellowships pair students with preceptors from a variety of laboratories and clinics at the University of Colorado-Denver, University of Colorado-Boulder, University of Colorado Hospital and other Denver-area healthcare institutions. Intern duties, which vary according to the needs of the preceptor, may include data collection, cell cultures, data analysis and testing. Fellows attend twice-weekly lectures and present their research findings at a concluding poster session. Applicants should have prior experience with advanced high school science classes, preferably those carrying an Advanced Placement or International Baccalaureate designation.

Type of instruction: Enrich. Courses: Animation Fashion Filmmaking Photog Sculpt.

Focus: Studio_Art.

Housing: Dorms.

Ses: 1. Wks/ses: 6½. Operates June-Aug.

Students in this intensive precollege program take up to four arts classes during the course of the session. Courses, which meet twice a week for two hours and 50 minutes per class, provide boys and girls with an exposure to college life and also help them determine if art and design is a suitable area for future study. Chaperoned recreational, cultural and community-oriented activities supplement course work.

The Ailey School offers a six-week Professional Division Summer Intensive for dancers ages 16-25 and a five-week Junior Division program for those ages 12-15 (only 15-year-olds may attend as boarding students). Students take 12 to 15 technique classes weekly from the school's core curriculum, including daily ballet classes and Horton- or Graham-based modern classes five to six times a week. Additional instruction addresses jazz, tap, hip-hop, Dunham, barre a terre, yoga, body conditioning and two levels of pointe. Guest choreographers conduct repertory workshops. Boarding students live in Fordham University housing. Three years of prior ballet training is a prerequisite.

While sampling college life, high schoolers enrolled in the program gain an introduction to several genres of creative writing: poetry, short fiction, creative nonfiction and drama. During morning and afternoon sessions, students complete writing-intensive exercises that address voice, character, metaphor, persona and narrative. Workshop sessions employ a seminar-like model that enables writers to critique and revise their work. In addition, staff conduct reading-intensive classes and roundtables designed to facilitate discussion of writers and their strategies.

The AU Theater Institute provides high schoolers with training in acting, voice, movement, design, technical theater and stage management. Students work on improving their skills and developing new levels of expertise in two or three of these areas. Included in the schedule is an outing to a professional theater. The two-week program culminates in a group performance. Rising juniors and seniors may earn two hours of college credit by completing extra assignments and paying an additional fee.

Alpha seeks talented young writers who have a strong interest in one of the following genres: science fiction, fantasy or horror. Topics covered in lectures and writing studios include character creation, plot, conflict and tension, dialogue, pace and structure. Working with professional authors, participants brainstorm on story ideas, compose first drafts, receive feedback and rewrite their pieces. Students also deliver public readings and learn about submitting manuscripts for publication.

The Young Writers Workshop is part of the National Writing and Thinking Network, the largest consortium of summer writing programs in the country. Unlike conventional workshops in creative or expository writing, Simon's Rock's program focuses on using informal, playful expressive writing as a way to strengthen skills of language and thinking. Subject matter ranges from stories and poems to personal experiences, natural phenomena and works of art. More polished pieces—such as personal narratives, stories, poems and exploratory essays—arise from the informal writing activities.

Rising high school sophomores, juniors and seniors who are advanced ballet dancers may apply to this precollege program; females should be en pointe. Each day begins in one of Juilliard's studios with a ballet technique class, followed by pointe, men's or classical partnering classes. After lunch, students take a modern dance class, then contemporary partnering, ballroom and music. Dancers supplement daily technique classes with evening rehearsals of new choreography and repertoire. Students perform the resulting pieces on the session's final day as part of a production that includes ballroom and music class presentations.

Participants in this residency program for high schoolers choose a studio major (photography, animation, sculpture, painting, kiln-fired glass, fashion design or printmaking) and a liberal arts course. Along with an intensive life drawing course, these programmatic elements teach students about the level of commitment and creativity required to become an artist. Within a college-like environment, boys and girls spend nine days each weekday working in the arts. Students exhibit their work in a public show, and each participant receives a portfolio review at the conclusion of the session.

Young Writers helps students explore ideas through writing and develop their creative and critical abilities with respect to language. Three 90-minute workshops each day balance class discussions of assigned readings with frequent work in small writing or inquiry groups and time for individual writing. In addition to free-writing exercises and responses to prompts, pupils compose stories, poetry, personal narratives, dialogues, reflective passages and experimental pieces. Participants regularly share works-in-progress both in class and in smaller peer review groups. Students each read pieces aloud as part of a series of public readings by visiting poets, fiction writers and essayists. Weekend activities include social events and field trips.

Designed to replicate the first year at an art college, MCAD Summer Expressions allows high schoolers to earn college credits, produce art and build a portfolio, and participate in social activities. Two distinct two-week sessions operate each summer, one focused upon music and media and the other on singular and sequential images. Students enrolled in the music session major in digital photography, documentary video, graphic design and multimedia, music video, or sound design and recording. Major options during the second session are animation, comic art, game design and painting.

Advanced middle school instrumentalists join high school musicians of all ability levels in this two-week program that focuses on jazz study and performance (in solo and small-group settings). The curriculum addresses three main areas: bebop and post bop, modal music, and avant-garde and ethereal styles. Private lessons and classes on improvisation, music theory and listening reinforce small-group playing. Ensembles perform weekly in a forum setting, and the program culminates in a final performance. Students may also participate in master classes and attend concerts with faculty and guest artists.

This enrichment program enables participants to explore all aspects of writing. Types of writing addressed include essay composition, nature writing, poetry, journal writing, fiction, memoir writing and creative nonfiction. Roundtable seminars, free writing time, one-on-one instruction, group editing, and presentations and class readings by guest writers help pupils further develop their writing skills. Boys and girls may read selections from new work each week during programwide open-reading sessions, and students produce a literary magazine at program's end.

This rigorous precollege program serves high school upperclassmen with an interest in the visual arts. Summer Studio's interdisciplinary curriculum addresses painting, drawing, printmaking, sculpture, installation, video, digital photography, sound art and performance. Faculty, teaching assistants and graduate student mentors help participants advance their technical skills in all subjects, learn to work independently and collaboratively, and participate in an artists' community. During the final week of the program, SMFA admissions officers and professional artists provide insights on portfolio building, the college application process and potential career paths in the arts. Visits to Boston museums and galleries are integral to the program. Each session culminates in a final exhibition of student work.

Governor's School summer students receive intensive arts training from practicing artists. Limited to South Carolina residents, the two-week Discovery (for rising ninth graders) and Academy (for rising 10th graders) programs focus upon creative writing, drama, visual arts, and vocal or instrumental music. The curriculum incorporates studio work, self-directed studies, performances, field trips, lectures and presentations by faculty and guest artists. The five-week Summer Dance program, open to students around the world entering grades 7-12, offers complex exercise training in both classical ballet and modern dance. Participants in all programs may showcase their work in end-of-session recitals, readings and presentations.

High school students with a serious interest in theater gain exposure at UCLA to the training and discipline required for participation in a university theater program or a career in the performing arts. Boys and girls attend morning performance classes addressing acting fundamentals, movement and improvisation, and scene. A performance workshop in the afternoon offers practical experience in the rehearsal and performance process. Under the guidance of an instructor, students take part in all aspects of the creative process: conceptualizing, writing and transforming ideas into dramatic action. A collaborative project leads to a session-closing performance for invited guests.

Offering intensive preprofessional training grounded in pure classical technique, Walnut

Hill's five-week Summer Dance (ages 13-17) places a strong emphasis on ballet, with supplementary classes provided in pointe; variation; men's work; and jazz, modern and character dance. All classes are graded according to age, technical ability and physical strength. Dancers take a minimum of three classes each day, in addition to participating in evening rehearsals or workshops and one Saturday class. A weekly lecture or a short workshop and planned recreational events are important aspects of the program. Other options include the three-week-long Summer Youth Dance (residential and day, ages 10-13) and two weeklong junior workshops for commuting children ages 5-11.

Children and adolescents who wish to improve their acting skills attend sessions at Azusa Pacific University. The Acting Camp enrolls boys and girls ages 7-17 with or without acting experience into a program that features an on-camera commercial workshop, an exploration of acting terms and techniques, on-camera screen study, improvisational games and memory skills training. Campers of the same age with at least a year of acting experience may enroll in the Pre-Professional Program, where they learn extensively about the film and television industries. Boys and girls ages 12-17 who are serious about pursuing a career in film or television—and who can furnish a referral from an acting teacher, director or out-of-state agent—may apply for the Casting Call program; this is an invitation-only session, and a phone interview is required.

Summer Theatre Institute-NYC offers intensive training with professional artists in a variety of theater techniques. Instruction combines core classes with specialized training in acting, musical theater, playwriting and directing. The session culminates in an original production that is a result of work at the institute. Professional theater teaching artists—many of whom teach at area colleges—serve as program instructors. Students live in Juilliard School dormitories and train at studios in the city's theater district.

ActionQuest offers programs for both beginners and more experienced students in the Caribbean, the Mediterranean, Australia, the Galapagos and the South Pacific. These experiential, expedition-based programs focus on sailing, scuba diving, cultural immersion, marine biology and exploration. Participants live aboard 50-foot sailing yachts while cruising from island to island. Shipmates are part of the crew-in-training and rotate on-board responsibilities daily. Advanced certification programs are available for shipmates with previous experience.

Held on the campus of American Farm School, Greek Summer combines community service with instruction about Greek folk music, Greek cooking, beekeeping and ecological issues. Students complete a service project for the benefit of the local community while living with a host family in a small Greek village. During their time on campus, boys and girls assist with the daily operation of the school's dairy, poultry unit, vineyard, olive groves, greenhouses and vegetable gardens. Another aspect of the session enables participants to spend 10 days traveling and visiting historical sites throughout Greece.

Through excursions lasting five to 23 days, TWA provides summer outdoor adventure education in the White Mountains of northern New Hampshire and Maine. Trips typically include such elements as backpacking, canoeing, kayaking, mountain biking and rock climbing. A minimum of two instructors leads each group of six to eight campers. Participants in each session may take part in a service project to help maintain the trail systems in the White Mountains. Specialty camps in mountain biking, white-water kayaking and leadership are available to boys and girls who wish to concentrate on a specific skill.

The Summer Academy hosts various commuter and residential summer camps designed to introduce the latest technology to aspiring aviators, astronauts, engineers and scientists. High school students earn college credit and gain insight into developments in space technology through three-week Aerospace I and II courses. Executive Training Academy introduces girls ages 14-17 to the world of business. Aviation Career Exploration programs allow middle and high school students to explore fields such as space technology, flight, air traffic control, meteorology, and engineering through the use of state-of-the-art simulation devices plus labs, field trips, classroom interaction, and guest speakers. Boys and girls interested in flight training choose from a flight exploration program (ages 12-18) and several precollege SunFlight offerings that serve beginners and serious pilots alike.

Fort Smith provides adventure travel camping and science/engineering career awareness programs for boys with a strong interest in the outdoors. Destinations and program content vary from year to year. All activities—including cooking and sleeping—are conducted outside. Although none of the pursuits are overly strenuous, much of the boys' time is spent walking and hiking at elevations between 5000 and 12,000 feet. Science career exploration features visits to several US national research laboratories, as well as to certain universities that are conducting research in the areas of energy, water and the environment. Campers also study the history of the American westward expansion.

While working closely with female high schoolers and college students who have demonstrated leadership skills and have held leadership positions, girls in the institute learn about the knowledge, skills and resources required for effective leadership. The program features a panel on civic leadership, guest speakers, a self-defense class and community service. Topics addressed include leadership ethics, leadership styles, communication skills and public speaking, mediation skills and conflict resolution, management techniques, assertiveness, goal setting, and group dynamics and roles. Girls who have completed Level 1 of the institute may return the following summer for Level 2, where they further develop their leadership skills through service work in Greater Hartford.

Reality Ranch's outdoor educational experience for boys emphasizes life skills instruction, emotional growth, and the development of healthy nutrition, hygiene and exercise habits. During the session, campers experience all that a soldier in basic training undergoes. Boys enroll from various backgrounds and religious denominations; some have attentional disorders, while others may simply be lacking in motivation or self-discipline.

Students choose from international locations in Fiji, Central America, South America, Iceland, Israel, Italy, England and Dominica—as well as the domestic destinations of New Orleans, LA, and Utah—where they work in groups of eight to 12 with local residents to perform group community projects. At some locations, participants spend part of each day on an individual internship. Boys and girls assist with evening meal preparation on a rotating basis. Participants decide as a group which recreational activities they will pursue during weekends. World Horizons also offers a photography tour of England and Iceland that incorporates some community service.

Campers choose from an array of programs conducted on the 40,000-acre ranch. Cowboy camp teaches participants grooming, saddling and horse safety. Campers learn basic pole patterns and engage in roping, riding and cattle work; they also ride out on the ranch for an overnight. Hunting camp teaches fundamental outdoor skills such as archery and shotgunning, and campers also learn the importance of hunting, conservation and wildlife management. Other aspects of the program include survival skills training, camp outs and wildlife projects. Advanced sessions accommodate experienced campers.

TRAVEL PROGRAMS

Travel programs are arranged alphabetically by name. An index beginning on page 458 lists the world regions to which participants travel. Programs offering a family session are indicated by “FAM” at the end of the age range in the index.

YFU's summer sessions allow students to live in and experience another culture while participating in intensive language study, journey or discovery programs. Not all programs are academic in nature, but many of them have a significant classroom component. Students at all locations embark on trips and engage in recreational activities while living with a host family.

INSTRUCTIONAL SPORTS PROGRAMS

Instructional sports programs are arranged alphabetically by name. The Table of Contents lists the subject areas presented, and an index beginning on page 474 lists the programs under each of those subjects. Programs offering a family session are indicated by “FAM” at the end of the age range in the index.

Alfred University conducts residential athletic camps for high school students in two sports. The swim camp, for boys and girls entering grades 7-12, addresses stroke development, training techniques and competitive strategies. Residential riders (ages 14-17) may participate in an English equestrian camp, while day riders (ages 8-16) choose from English or Western programs; no prior riding experience is necessary. Each camper is assigned a horse and has the opportunity to ride and care for the horse while refining his or her riding skills.

Conducted on the 600-acre campus of Kents Hill School, the camp seeks to develop athletic skills in its campers through individualized instruction. Prior to enrollment, boys and girls typically choose two of the following sports for intensive instruction: ice hockey, basketball, soccer, baseball, tennis or flag football. Campers receive instruction in these major sports for up to two periods per day. Boys and girls fill out their daily schedules by choosing from such pursuits as other land sports, watersports and arts activities.

Certified coaches provide gymnastics, cheerleading, in-line skating, skateboarding and action sports instruction at this camp for boys and girls of all ability levels, including beginners. For gymnasts, facilities include three gyms and bungee trampolines to provide assistance with technique. The action sports program utilizes indoor and outdoor ramps, concrete bowls, half pipes, street courses, rails and foam pits. In addition to its Pennsylvania site, Woodward operates camps in Tehachapi, CA; Cable, WI; and Copper Mountain, CO.

SPECIAL-NEEDS PROGRAMS

Special-needs programs are arranged alphabetically by name. The Table of Contents lists the conditions addressed, and an index beginning on page 528 lists the programs under each of those conditions. Programs offering a family session are indicated by “FAM” at the end of the age range in the index. A Key to Conditions Accepted on page 547 presents the abbreviations used in this chapter.

A more complete compilation of schools serving children or young adults with learning disabilities and special needs is available in Porter Sargent’s Guide to Private Special Education. For details, please visit www.portersargent.com or see page 880.

Campers at Pennbrook focus on the fundamentals of healthy eating. By combining proper nutrition with recreational activities, the program promotes a healthy approach to weight loss that parents can easily reinforce. Each camper meets with a food advisor upon arrival to review her goals and objectives. She has another private session before going home to review a personalized menu planner and discuss issues and concerns about maintaining weight loss after camp. A combination of recreational activities, specialty programs, events and trips completes the program.

Ridge Creek's clinically integrated outdoor leadership program combines cognitive-based therapeutic work with wilderness training and adventure. Adolescents enrolled in the program, which operates throughout the year, range from those simply needing to refocus to those experiencing significant behavioral difficulties. Most students exhibit behaviors consistent with oppositional defiant disorder, and boys and girls may struggle with adolescent adjustment and authority issues. The 28-day program seeks to address misbehavior that typically leads to impaired social, academic or occupational functioning. Applicants must not be suffering from hallucinations or delusions, nor can they be actively suicidal or homicidal.

WLC offers separate camping sessions for children with visual, hearing or mild cognitive disabilities, and children with diabetes. All programs are offered free of charge to Wisconsin residents; nonresidents are admitted on a space-available basis after the deadline and pay a minimal fee. Typical camp activities include swimming, canoeing, sailing, boating, kayaking, fishing, archery, crafts, nature programs, sports and games. Older campers take canoeing and backpacking trips.

CAMPS WITH A RELIGIOUS FOCUS

These recreational programs are arranged in alphabetical state order, and within each state, programs are arranged alphabetically first by town and then name. An index beginning on page 610 lists programs by religion, as shown in the Table of Contents. Programs offering a family session are indicated by “FAM” at the end of the age range in the index.

Although similar in many ways to traditional recreational camps, these programs place a primary emphasis on religious activities and values. While many camps in this chapter identify themselves as nondenominational Christian, others affiliate themselves with a specific religion.

Located in the Laurentian Mountains, Kinneret offers a Jewish and Zionist summer camping experience complemented by recreational activities. The program includes sports, drama, dance, canoeing, riding, aquatics, crafts, nature and hiking. Sixteen-year-olds take part in a program focusing upon leadership enrichment. The camp conducts Shabbat services each Friday evening, as well as optional Saturday morning services.

RECREATIONAL CAMPS

Recreational camps are arranged in alphabetical state order, and within each state, programs are arranged alphabetically first by town and then name. Canadian camps appear after US camps. Boys', girls', coeducational, and coordinate (operating concurrently) single-gender boys' and girls' camps appear in one large chapter. The program type is indicated in the age range following the camp name. An index of camps offering family sessions begins on page 682.

Nakanawa, which is located at an elevation of 2000 feet on the Cumberland Plateau, divides its traditional girls' camps into junior, intermediate and senior sections, depending upon age. Staff encourage girls at the junior camp to try every activity in order to gain experience and to develop fundamental skills. Campers in the intermediate and senior camps engage in only four required activities (swimming, tennis, canoeing and glee club), thus providing them with the opportunity to set their own schedules. A free day each week allows girls to take part in a planned trip off site or receive additional instruction in an activity.

Located on two islands in Algonquin Park's Canoe Lake, these brother and sister camps provide a varied recreational program that is adaptable to individual needs. The camps are sufficiently distant from each other to function as independent units, but they are also near enough to facilitate intercamp interaction each Thursday. Tennis, archery, windsurfing, music, sailing, swimming, horseback riding, drama, and arts and crafts are among the daily activities. In addition, boys and girls may embark on canoeing trips of 20, 30, 40 or 50 days.

Located southeast of Montreal, Wilvaken offers a traditional recreational program in a bilingual setting. French as a Second Language and English as a Second Language instruction aids those interested in improving their French or English. Boys and girls have the autonomy to choose their own activities, as the daily schedule is not overly structured. Campers may embark on three- to four-day canoeing or hiking trips. An English-style riding program is available for an additional fee.

Located in Quebec's Laurentian Mountains, Pripstein's offers combination of watersports and athletic and creative activities. The waterfront program is especially strong, with instruction available in many boating pursuits. Land sports combine instructional activities with house leagues, in-camp tournaments and occasional intercamp competitions. The in-line skate park is particularly popular, and Pripstein's also maintains an on-site indoor ice arena for ice hockey and skating. The camp's arts program consists of arts and crafts, bead and jewelry making, pottery, music recording and jazz dance. Two-week sessions enroll campers entering grades 2-5 only.
